There are two kinds of friction which we are all very# familiar with in shop and railroad work. When you roll a pair of wheels on the rails they are easily moved, but if you try to slide them a great deal of strength must be exerted. One is a case of rolling friction, the other is sliding friction. A rope passed over a pulley that revolves, moves by rolling friction; when a rope is moved over a bar or thrvugh a ring, it has to be moved by sliding friction.
